only of some extra apparatus to enablem to do the work. This makes a total sleven plants, and while some of the them to do the work. This makes a total of eleven plants, and while some of them would be pushed to their utmost capacity to construct two battleships each, and others are overcrowded with government work there is a feeling among a number of naval officers that they would rise to the occasion and if the building program suggested by Mr. Joy were spread over eight or even over six years it could be completed to the satisfaction of the naval authorities. In this connection it should be borne in mind that it takes nearly four years to build a battleship.

satisfaction of the naval authorities. In this connection it should be borne in mind that it takes nearly four years to build a battleship.

But despite the opposing views of naval experts as to the necessity of radically augmenting the fleet at this time, the ideas of those who take the negative on professional grounds are admittedly tempered by a williamness to make immense preparation for a tremendous advance in inaval construction if the men in authority show cause for fear that a hostile emergency is not far distant. Unquestionably there is a strong feeling amone naval men—and it is very general—that the time is approaching when the United States must be prepared to fight for its trade rights and the minitenance of the Monree doctrine. Certainly many things being done by the army and the many have that expectation in view, although the more conservative officers of the government refuse to tolerate the idea that there is danger of a hostile conflict with any European power. Mr. Joy, in explaining the resson for the introduction of ois radical measure, said that its only purpose was to provide a fleet aufficient to insure respect for the consistent American policy of preventing the acquisition of territory in this hemisphere by non-American antions. If Mr. Joy would talk, as he has presumably done, with army and hav officers, he would find there is a growing ophilor, throughout both surviews rapidly crystallitude flue converted to in military experts in America with eves of susulcion. Curlously enough it is almost generally healered to military circles that this fast sugmentation is directed unitally toward the United States.
